getting old, when I can't lift the buckets and the molds." She showed him her round, muscular arm, because they were Gontish matters, truths of Gont. They were not written even in Ard's lore-books. Wordless at first, he simply shook his head. After a while he was able to laugh. "I think we've. In the rage of his agony the Enemy raised up a great wave and sent it speeding to overwhelm the island of Solea. Elfarran knew this, as she knew the moment of Morred's death. She bade her people take to their boats; then, the poem says, "She took her small harp in her hands," and in the hour of waiting for the destroying wave that only Morred might have stilled, she made the song called The Lament for the White Enchanter. The island was drowned beneath the sea, and Elfarran with it. But her boat-cradle of willow wood, floating free, bore their child Serriadh to safety, wearing Morred's pledge, the ring that bore the Rune of Peace. . . were people of the Hand in the Great Port. What does it matter what Tarry thinks? You already play the harp about nine times better than he ever did." . . . around the other one, Otak, like a wavering fire, and shadows jumping, and his voice not like any. "I can't," he said, and stopped, and went on, "I really don't want to have any dancing." . . . "Learn our strength!" said Medra. "Where's the girl?" . . . borrowing tools from a farmer and buying nails and plaster in Thwil Town, for she still had half. appropriate, and that Ged, whom many call the greatest of the arch-mages, may have been the last. "There's nobody in the village could change that," she said. She looked up into his face for a moment. "The whole village together couldn't change that!" she said, and laughed. It was all right, then, though the word "change" rang and rang in his head. . . . So it became dangerous to practice sorcery, except under the protection of a strong warlord; and. She said nothing. Labby, glancing at her, set his woodhorn to his lips. The drummer struck a triple beat on his tabor, and they were off into a sailor's jig. . . . Maybe it was to escape the hunt that Medra came to Pendor, a long way west of the Inmost Sea, or. leave him to breathe the fumes of quicksilver in that highest vault till he died. . . . But when his. These legends are best preserved in Hur-at-Hur, the easternmost of the Kargad Lands, where dragons have degenerated into animals without high intelligence. Yet it is in Hur-at-Hur that people keep the most vivid conviction of the original kinship of human and dragon kind. And with these tales of ancient times come stories of recent days about dragons who take human form, humans who take dragon form, beings who are in fact both human and dragon. . . . After a while he said, "I could chase an etymology on the brink of doom . . . But I think, Azver. . . NEONAX NEONAX NEONAX. These might have been the names of stations, or possibly of." And that made him a mage. He got up in the icy morning while they still slept rolled in their blankets. He knew where the cattle were nearby, and went to them. The sickness was very familiar to him now. He felt it in his hands as a burning, and a queasiness if it was much advanced. Approaching one steer that was lying down, he found himself dizzy and retching. He came no closer, but said words that might ease the dying, and went on. "He lay as if dead, cold, his heart not beating, yet he breathed. The Herbal used all his art, but. have no other language. He had lost something and had to find it. He did not know what he had lost, but it was in the fiery tower, the place where stone stairs went up among smoke and fumes. He had to go there. He got to his feet and shuffled, lame and unsteady, back down the valley. . . . It was hard work out in the pastures. "Who doesn't do hard work?" Emer had asked, showing her. As if to illustrate what he was saying, he had picked up a bit of brick from the broken pavement, and tossed it up in the air, and as he spoke it fluttered about their heads on delicate blue wings, a butterfly. He put out his finger and the butterfly lighted on it. He shook his finger and the butterfly fell to the ground, a fragment of brick. The True Runes used in the Archipelago embody words of the Speech of the Making. True Runes are not symbols only, but reifactors: they can be used to bring a thing or condition into being or bring about an event. To write such a rune is to act. The power of the action varies with the circumstances. Most of the True Runes are found only in ancient texts and lore-books, and used only by wizards trained in their use; but a good many of them, such as the symbol written on the door lintel to protect a house from fire, are in common use, familiar to unlearned people. "Something to drink? Prum, extran, morr, cider?" bedizened baby's face and whisper, adoring, "My immortality!"
